A box full of light

A long time ago, in the Land of the Animals, it was always night.

It was quite dark, all the time.

The animals had a hard life, as they kept bumping into things.

"I don't like this at all!" whined Fox.

"I can't see to find my lunch."

“What I need,” he said to himself,
“is a good pal, to help me.
But who shall I pick?”

In the end he decided on Kestrel,
with her strong wings and her
good sight.

The next day, Kestrel said to Fox,
“In the Land of Humans, there is a bright light. Kite told me. Shall we go and steal it?”

So off they went,
Kestrel gliding on her wide grey wings
while Fox trotted along the track.

Twice, they saw bright flashes of lightning.

“That must be the light!” said Fox with a smile.

The light guided them to a camp with five tents.
Men cooked fish with spicy fried rice,
and their wives and children ate slices of rabbit pie.
It was a fine sight.

“That smells nice!” said Kestrel.
“This must be the Land of Humans.”

Fox was looking at a big box,
almost hidden behind a pile of pine logs.

“What’s inside it, do you think?” he asked.

Kestrel spotted a chink in the box.

“I think it might be – the light!” she said.

“Let’s hide until the men go to sleep,” said Fox.
“We can lie behind that pile of logs.
Then we’ll grab the box of light.
What a prize!”

And that is what they did.

On the way back, Kestrel had to rest for a while.

Fox sat beside the box as she slept.

He kept looking at the box.

He sniffed the lid.

He untied the lid and peeped into the box –
but the lid slipped right off,
and a bolt of white light shot up, up,
into the blackness of the night!

Fox had such a fright that he shook Kestrel's wing until she sat up.

"Fetch the light back!" he said.

So Kestrel took a long flight –
nine, ten, eleven miles –
so high that she went right out of sight.

But she didn't catch the bright light.

This story has a happy ending.

The bright light was the Sun!

Fox had set it free, and it stayed high up so that it could shine on all the animals as well as on Humans.
